Yugoslav authorities have set up a camp in Petrovgrad to provide quarters for Rumanian and Hungarian refugees. At one time during the spring, the camp totalled approximately 250 Rumanians and 400 Hungarians, and preparations were under way to house a number of expected Bulgarian refugees.

The Yugoslavs promise jobs to the refugees which correspond to their skills and abilities; good wages and a comfortable living are assured, but these people, however, are eventually put to work as common miners.
